

A Man Should Never Hit a Woman, Is that true?

What does the Bible say about men hitting women?

What it says is that the head of a household is responsible to discipline the household. It says how to discipline, when to discipline, why to discipline, and it even describes where to discipline.

The head of the household can be a man or a woman, but always the husband if he is around. The household is the wife, children, and slaves. At that time, slaves were people who chose to join a household for a period of time to pay their bills. Think of someone who joins the military for a while so they can go to college. Think indentured servants coming to America. Think apprenticeship. Think elderly people who can't survive on their own. Earmarks were for people who chose to be permanent slaves, permanently protected, and not respected.

The bible describes discipline as spanking and nothing else. It describes the spanking tool as a rod. Think short fishing rod for the shape of the rod. We spank with the whippy end. It describes where to discipline, on the sensitive butt where it will hurt but not harm. It may even leave a mark, but that will go away.

The bible describes why to discipline, to learn to love authority. Through discipline, we learn to communicate with authority. God controls all authority. Through discipline we learn to submit to God. We also learn we have influence over authority when we submit to God by submitting to his authority. We can open our heart to authority with respect the authority will listen, but we must let them have the last word. Think little child praying to God to change the heart of the authority. When we open our heart to God, he gives us what we want by changing our heart, so our heart becomes his heart. The children end up loving their parents, loving discipline, loving the two-way communication with God, and loving a clear conscience. In my work with the history of the Saints, I can say they all submitted to authority. Their hearts were changed and they loved what God was doing through those evil authorities. Of course, I am talking about the martyred saints and not for example social justice saints. Miracles attracted outsiders to God through their submission. For that reason, they learned to love authority, and even the evil people in authority.

The bible describes when and when not to discipline. It is all about authority. We discipline for disobedience and for a bad reaction to authority. We discipline for disrespectful attitudes to authority. We never discipline for mistakes or poor performance. Discipline is all about authority, and pain for disrespect.

Is there any other way?

Yes, if household members want, they can learn to love obedience. In other words, the head can teach them the benefits of obedience, there are many.

From where did the idea that men should not hit women come?

Modern western thought from Rousseau to Fascism, to Socialism, to National Socialism, to Communism, to Progressivism, to all the One World Government isms that have been dreamed up by rational people since the age of reason in the 300's. Their goal is to abolish the family, the power of the householder over the family. Can't have the householder in power with one world government. Faith is not reasonable. Nothing in the Gospel is reasonable. Test that yourself. It was only natural that reasonable people should come up with the idea that men should not hit women. Reason is ungodly.
